A fair comparison would require the inclusion of direct and indirect supervision and overhead too.

$45 / hr is 1 person with benefits (health insurance, sick leave, vacation, 401k), a vehicle, equipment, thoughtful supervision, liability insurance, and an outstanding track record of performance. It's what we've been paying since day #1. Clean Streets pays about $14 to $20 / hr, which provides a stable and consistent work force that we've benefited from greatly. I've thought about it and concluded it's a good deal. The person is not simply a "weed puller." That's an unfair over simplification, in my opinion.

What's it cost Drollinger for your lowest paid maintenance worker?

What other charges were you "surprised " about? Probably the pressure washing. The BID pays $75 / hr. Most everyone else is over $100. Did that surprise you?

Yes. And that's where I've established the control point.

I'm thinking they just haven't sent it through to me yet. It's CNSS.

What happened to 2/8 - 2/21? Did we already pay it?
